The number of married men and women will fall below 50% of the population for the first time within six years according to Government forecasts. The number of couples who live together but are not married will almost double to 3.8 million by 2013. The figures also show that there were 166700 divorces in 2003. A senior representative of Relate (a voluntary service involved in couple counselling during possible family breakdown) said that many people told her that they could not see the point of marriage.

(a)	Fig. 4. Describe three trends for marriage.
