Section ASources for Question 1

Read all the sources below and use them when answering Question 1.

SOURCE A: The National Farmers' Union

The National Farmers' Union is often quoted as a classic example of an insider pressure group.

According to the NFU's website, the closeness of its London office to parliament has helped foster closer links with politicians and their staff of all parties and the frequent meetings, both formal and informal, that take place between the NFU and politicians are an invaluable strength of the organisation.

The NFU claims that it has "excellent access to ministers, opposition parties' spokesmen, backbench MPs and peers when domestic legislation is being developed or new regulations from the European Union are being enacted into UK law" and that it "provides evidence to a wide range of Select Committee inquiries and is frequently invited to take part in oral evidence sessions." It also supplies "briefings on subjects of interest to politicians, regular updates on specific policy areas and gives MPs suggestions for questions for Ministers."

SOURCE B: Hunting with Dogs

After almost a hundred years of campaigning and political lobbying by The League Against Cruel Sports, Campaigning to Protect Hunted Animals and other animal welfare groups, hunting with dogs was banned in England and Wales in 2004.

During the 1990s, five private members' bills were introduced into the Commons to ban hunting with dogs, but each failed. However, following the report of a committee of inquiry in 2000, the Labour government published its own proposals for reform in 2002. Although the government's first attempt to legislate failed because of opposition in the House of Lords, the bill was reintroduced the next session, and, after clearing the Commons by 339 votes to 155, the Parliament Act was used to force it through the Lords.
