TEXT 4

In 1979 Anne Oakley used in-depth, detailed and open questions to study women's experience of becoming a first-time mother. She interviewed over 100 women and one of the issues she was interested in was the level of support they were receiving from their partners.

Measuring income poverty

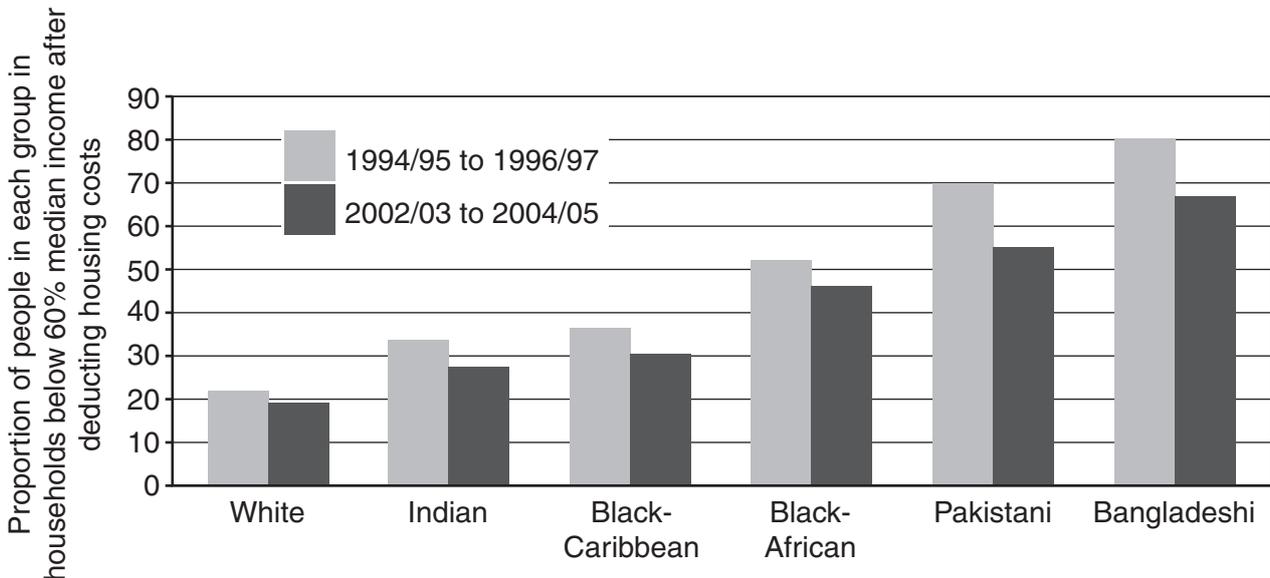

This study uses a relative income measure adjusted for household size, the standard measure of poverty in Great Britain since at least the late 1990s.

A household is defined as in 'income poverty' if its income is less than 60% of the contemporary Great Britain median household income. In 2004/05, this was worth:

- £100 per week for a single adult with no dependent children;
- £183 per week for a couple with no dependent children;
- £186 for a lone parent with two dependent children; and
- £268 per week for a couple with two dependent children.

These sums are measured after deducting income tax, council tax and housing costs (including rents, mortgage interest, buildings insurance and water charges). The money left over is therefore what the household has available to spend on everything else it needs, from food and heating to travel and entertainment.

'Death of the traditional family'

The article quotes Dr Richard Woolfson, a leading family expert and child psychologist: 'The nature of family life has changed significantly in the last 30 years. The traditional nuclear family of two parents and 2.4 children has become a museum piece.'
