Switching to OCR from AQA

Introduction

Whether taking on the AS or the full A Level, this innovative course is structured to underpin the knowledge and understanding needed for the next generation of thoughtful and passionate critical readers and writers. So why choose OCR's English Language and Literature?

- The specification is stimulating and varied to teach and learn, giving students the essentials for related higher education courses as well as many transferable, marketable skills for a range of possible career paths
- Developed in partnership with The English and Media Centre (EMC)
- The course supports the development of the key skills and concepts in the study of both language and literature in a clear, coherent way
- There are opportunities for personal, tailored choices of texts for study
- There are opportunities for genuine creative writing within both the non-examined assessment (NEA) and an examined component.

How do I find out more?

- Visit our A/AS Level English Language and Literature (EMC) subject webpage to access the specification, specimen assessment materials and a wide range of free support materials, from teacher guides to delivery guides, lesson elements, practical activities, candidate exemplars and more.
- Join our conversation on the OCR Community and @ocr_english to exchange ideas and information and share good practice.
