Unit A022/01: How far did British society change, 1939–1975?

General Certificate of Secondary Education

Mark Scheme for June 2016

OCR (Oxford Cambridge and RSA) is a leading UK awarding body, providing a wide range of qualifications to meet the needs of candidates of all ages and abilities. OCR qualifications include AS/A Levels, Diplomas, GCSEs, Cambridge Nationals, Cambridge Technicals, Functional Skills, Key Skills, Entry Level qualifications, NVQs and vocational qualifications in areas such as IT, business, languages, teaching/training, administration and secretarial skills.

It is also responsible for developing new specifications to meet national requirements and the needs of students and teachers. OCR is a not-for-profit organisation; any surplus made is invested back into the establishment to help towards the development of qualifications and support, which keep pace with the changing needs of today's society.

This mark scheme is published as an aid to teachers and students, to indicate the requirements of the examination. It shows the basis on which marks were awarded by examiners. It does not indicate the details of the discussions which took place at an examiners' meeting before marking commenced.

All examiners are instructed that alternative correct answers and unexpected approaches in candidates' scripts must be given marks that fairly reflect the relevant knowledge and skills demonstrated.

Mark schemes should be read in conjunction with the published question papers and the report on the examination.

OCR will not enter into any discussion or correspondence in connection with this mark scheme.

Source A presents women in their traditional role as ‘housewives’ who can contribute to the war effort as the main homemakers and can therefore take control of household matters like recycling waste materials. Even though Source B appears to contradict this view by showing a woman involved in skilled labour, the tone is actually quite patronising. So the leaflet actually supports Source A. For example, it says, ‘The average woman takes to welding as readily as she takes to knitting’ which just portrays the same stereotype of women. So both sources are targeted at women, trying to get them to support the war effort and they both do this by showing what society thought was good and proper in terms of the role of women. At this time, despite the fact that millions of women were involved in munitions work, the armed forces and the land army, women were still expected to look after their families and homes as they had always done. After the war, many younger women were in fact reluctant to continue with paid employment. In 1951 only 26% of married women worked.

Q	Answer	Marks	Guidance
1	Q: Study Sources A and B. How similar are these two sources? Use details of the sources and your knowledge to explain your answer.
	Level 5	8–9	Answers at L5 will typically argue that the two sources are similar because they both demonstrate similar attitudes towards women and will centre their argument around the patronising tone of Source B (eg similar because A presents women in their traditional role as ‘housewives’ who can contribute to the war effort as homemakers. Even though Source B appears to contradict this view by showing a woman involved in skilled labour, the tone is actually quite patronising, saying ‘the average woman takes to welding as readily as she takes to knitting’). They will place the sources either in the context of WWII or use the post-war period to explain that attitudes were broadly similar even after the war (eg despite the fact that millions of women were involved in munitions work, the armed forces and the land army, women were still expected to look after their families. Or eg even after the war, many younger women left their jobs). Nutshell: Similar because both reveal patronising attitudes towards women – valid explanation of sources in context.
	Level 4	6–7	Answers at L4 will typically argue that the sources are similar because they both have a similar message/purpose (eg trying to get them to support the war effort) OR will typically argue that the sources are similar because they are both being positive about women’s contributions to the war effort (eg similar because both show women as important in the war – A shows women helping the war effort as homemakers who can take control of recycling. B also shows women as helping but through more skilled labour). They will place their answers broadly in the context of WWII. Nutshell: Similar because of message/purpose OR similar because both positive about women’s war effort – valid explanation of sources in context.
	Level 3	4–5	Answers at L3 will typically argue that the sources are different because they portray women/women’s roles in a different light. Candidates at this level are unlikely to pick up on the patronising tone of B (eg different because A shows women only as traditional housewives and homemakers, whereas B shows women as capable of taking on more skilled industrial work). OR Answers will typically make a logical comparison based on a misinterpretation of Source A (4 marks). Nutshell: different because of different portrayal of women/women’s roles OR misinterpretation of A.
	Level 2	2–3	Answers at L2 will typically compare isolated parts of the sources (or source provenance) to explain how the sources are similar and/or different (eg different because A shows women working at home whereas B shows them welding; similar because both show women did things in the war; similar because both produced by the government; similar because both about women in the war). Nutshell: Compares isolated details or provenance.
	Level 1	1	Answers at L1 will typically describe the sources with no attempt to compare them (eg Source A shows women recycling materials for the war. Source B shows a women working in a factory.) Nutshell: Description of sources with no valid comparison.
	Level 0	0/NR	No response or no response worthy of credit.

	Q: Study Source C. What is the cartoonist's message? Use details of the source and your knowledge to explain your answer. Level 5 (8 marks) Candidates demonstrate a sophisticated knowledge and understanding of the issue of Equal Pay during this period. They interpret the cartoon by explaining the cartoonist's main message and produce a fully developed response, supported by comprehensive contextual knowledge and understanding. Level 4 (6–7 marks) Candidates demonstrate sound knowledge and understanding of the issue of Equal Pay during this period. They interpret the cartoon by explaining the cartoon's main message and produce a developed response, supported by sound contextual knowledge and understanding. Level 3 (4–5 marks) Candidates demonstrate some knowledge and understanding of the issue of Equal Pay during this period. They interpret a valid sub-message of the cartoon and produce a valid response supported by some contextual knowledge and understanding. Level 2 (2–3 marks) Candidates demonstrate limited knowledge and understanding of the issue of Equal Pay during this period. They produce a simple response about a message of the cartoon. Level 1 (1 mark) Candidates describe the source and produce a very limited response. Level 0 (0 marks) No response or no response worthy of credit.	8	This is an example of a top level response that may be used as guidance, demonstrating evidence of all three AOs. The cartoonist is criticising the government for continually making excuses not to introduce Equal Pay for women by imagining a scene in 1994, 40 years into the future, where women are still being denied this right. At this time, it was expected that women would give up work when they married, when it became the husband's responsibility to provide for the family. So it was not thought necessary to consider Equal Pay for women as they would not work as long as men. In 1951, women working in public services had started a campaign for Equal Pay. They went on marches, organised petitions and lobbied MPs. However, in 1954, Equal Pay still had not been introduced, as the cartoon shows. The cartoon shows an imagined scene, 40 years into the future, where the Chancellor is still telling the female campaigners that the government 'agrees in principle' but that the time isn't right, 'etc.etc.' The cartoonist is saying the government is not really serious about introducing Equal Pay; if they were serious then they would stop making excuses and do it.

Q	Answer	Marks	Guidance
2	Q: Study Source C. What is the cartoonist's message? Use details of the cartoon and your knowledge to explain your answer.
	Level 5	8	Answers at L5 will typically set out the cartoonist's viewpoint (critical of the government for not introducing Equal Pay for women) and explain how the cartoonist conveys this message (eg the scene is set 40 years into the future and women are still being denied this right so the cartoonist is saying the government is not really serious about introducing Equal Pay). They will set the cartoon in its context, which may be a general comment about discrimination or attitudes towards women in the 1950s. Nutshell: Critical of government inaction on Equal Pay with how this is conveyed in context.
	Level 4	6–7	Answers at L4 will typically set out the cartoon's message (women should have Equal Pay / the cartoon is supportive of women getting Equal Pay) and explain how the cartoonist conveys this. Answers will set the cartoon in context, which may be a general comment about discrimination or attitudes towards women in the 1950s. Nutshell: Support for Equal Pay with how this is conveyed in context.
	Level 3	4–5	Answers at L3 will typically explain a valid sub-message (eg women are not treated equally, women don't earn as much as men for doing the same work; women won't ever get equal pay, the government aren't taking women seriously) with explanation based on basic context. Nutshell: Sub-message with simple context.
	Level 2	2–3	Answers at L2 will typically interpret isolated details of the cartoon without reference to an overall message (eg lots of women are now in work; these women look like secretaries. / The banner says 'Equal Pay'; this represents the fact that in 1951, women had started a campaign for Equal Pay in the public sector.). Nutshell: Interprets isolated parts of cartoon.
	Level 1	1	Answers at L1 will typically describe the source and/or misinterpret the cartoon. Nutshell: Description/misinterpretation.
	Level 0	0/NR	No response or no response worthy of credit.

	Q: Study Sources D and E. Why do these two sources disagree? Use details of the sources and your knowledge to explain your answer. Level 5 (8–9 marks) Candidates demonstrate a sophisticated understanding of the sources and knowledge and understanding of attitudes towards women in the 1950s and 1960s. They interpret the purpose of the sources in context and produce a fully developed response to explain why they disagree. Level 4 (6–7 marks) Candidates demonstrate sound understanding of the sources and knowledge and understanding of women in the 1950s and 1960s. They produce a sound response to explain that they disagree because of when they were written. Level 3 (4–5 marks) Candidates demonstrate some understanding of the sources and knowledge and understanding of attitudes towards women in the 1950s and 1960s. They identify valid reason(s) why these sources disagree. Level 2 (2–3 marks) Candidates demonstrate limited knowledge and understanding of attitudes towards women in the 1950s and 1960s. They produce a basic response by comparing the attitudes of the authors of the two sources. Level 1 (1 mark) Candidates describe the sources and produce a very limited response. Level 0 (0 marks) No response or no response worthy of credit.	9	This is an example of a top level response that may be used as guidance, demonstrating evidence of all three AOs. These two sources disagree because they each had a different purpose. Source D was a pamphlet published to advise mothers on the impact of leaving their children. This was published by Bowlby to reinforce the view that mothers were the primary care givers and should give up work to stay at home with the children. It was not controversial to recommend that women shouldn't leave their children. Expecting mothers to feel 'satisfaction in their families' was typical of attitudes at this time. However, Source E has a different purpose. It was published to challenge these accepted ideas and change attitudes towards women working after they got married. By 1967, when the article was written, the women's movement was growing in strength and there were local women's groups all over the country which aimed to question traditional assumptions that women were born to be homemakers and give up their independence when their children were born. This is why the article argues that there is no such thing as a 'maternal instinct' and that it is only a 'comfortable male myth'. She is trying to show that bringing up children should not only be the job of women.

Q	Answer	Marks	Guidance
3	Q: Study Sources D and E. Why do these two sources disagree? Use details of the sources and your knowledge to explain your answer.
	Level 5	8–9	Answers at L5 will typically compare the context of the two views as in Level 4 and contain a valid explanation of the purpose of Source E (eg disagree because D reflects the majority view held at the time that mothers should give up work to stay at home with the children. However, Source E was published to challenge these ideas and change attitudes towards women working after they got married. By 1967, there were women’s groups all over the country which aimed to question traditional assumptions that women should give up their independence when their children were born). In a nutshell: Different because of purpose and context – valid explanation of purpose of E in context the sources.
	Level 4	6–7	Answers at L4 will typically compare the two views of women and then explain differences through a valid comparison of context (eg disagree because D was published in 1958, reflecting the view held at the time that mothers should give up work to stay at home with the children. It was not controversial at this time to recommend that women shouldn’t leave their children. Expecting mothers to feel ‘satisfaction in their families’ was typical. However, by 1967, when Source E was published, the women’s movement was growing in strength. There were women’s groups all over the country which aimed to question traditional assumptions that women should give up their independence when their children were born). Nutshell: Different because of context – valid and developed comparison of context of the sources.
	Level 3	4–5	Answers at L3 will typically explain the contrasting attitudes or features of each source (eg D says that women should stay at home and look after their children – it says this brings satisfaction for women, but E describes bringing up children as a ‘mindless task’ – it gives the impression that women should not have to give up work if they don’t want to). Nutshell: Explains how the sources are different through a comparison of content.
	Level 2	2–3	Answers at L2 will typically make undeveloped comments relating to source provenance (eg D was written by a psychologist but E was written by a feminist. D was produced in 1958 but E was written in 1967.). Nutshell: Undeveloped provenance or unsupported assertions.
	Level 1	1	Answers at L1 will typically describe the sources with no attempt to compare them (eg Source D says that a mother’s job is demanding. Source B says that men would not be happy bringing up children.). Nutshell: Description of sources with no valid comparison.

In November 1970, members of the Women's Liberation movement disrupted the competition inside and outside the Albert Hall by shouting, and throwing smoke and flour bombs. They claimed the competition treated women like objects. The author of this article claims that the demonstration had 'struck a blow' against the fate of women only to be physical objects of attraction. At this time, women were starting to win more rights, but organisations like this were still campaigning for equality, an end to discrimination, and to change the role and status of women in society. They especially wanted to raise women's awareness of society's expectations and to make them feel more powerful.

The Second World War opened up opportunities for many women; for example, almost a million women worked in the armed forces. and about 260,000 worked in the munitions industry. However, this is not to say that the war necessarily brought changes of attitude. Source B plays on women’s more feminine attributes in order to persuade them to go into war work. Also, women were still expected to look after their families and homes at the same time. Once the war was over, although many women did stay on in full or part-time employment, lots of women still saw their primary role as having a family and looking after the home and it took until 1955 for the government to introduce Equal Pay in the public sector, as shown by Source C where the government are shown to be continually postponing it. Although this shows that attitudes towards equality were beginning to change, this change was very slow in coming because it took until 1970 to achieve Equal Pay in private industries, and even then there was still widespread discrimination against women on grounds of experience or training. The 1960s and 70s saw other legislation which was a sign that attitudes were changing – the introduction of The Pill and the Abortion Act of 1967 gave women more control over their families and their bodies, whilst the Divorce Reform Act of 1969 and the Matrimonial Property Act of 1970 allowed for divorce when the marriage had broken down and allowed women a share of the family assets. These were big steps towards full equality. However, legislation could not change attitudes at the same pace. Women were still expected in the late 1960s to be the homemakers and it was only ‘radical’ magazines, like Source E, that were challenging this convention. The demonstration against Miss World and the report on it published in Source F shows that women’s liberation groups in 1970 also saw the need to fight against ‘the way women are seen and the way they fit into society’. In conclusion, much progress had been made 1939 – 75 in terms of what
