AS Level English Literature Exemplar Candidate Work

Introduction

These exemplar answers have been chosen from the summer 2018 examination series.

OCR is open to a wide variety of approaches and all answers are considered on their merits. These exemplars, therefore, should not be seen as the only way to answer questions but do illustrate how the mark scheme has been applied.

Please always refer to the specification https://www.ocr.org.uk/lmages/171201-specification-accredited-as-level-gce-level-english-literature-h072.pdf for full details of the assessment for this qualification. These exemplar answers should also be read in conjunction with the sample assessment materials and the June 2018 Examiners' report or Report to Centres available from Interchange https://interchange.ocr.org.uk/Home.mvc/Index

The question paper, mark scheme and any resource booklet(s) will be available on the OCR website from summer 2019. Until then, they are available on OCR Interchange (school exams officers will have a login for this and are able to set up teachers with specific logins – see the following link for further information http://www.ocr.org.uk/administration/support-and-tools/interchange/managing-user-accounts/).

It is important to note that approaches to question setting and marking will remain consistent. At the same time OCR reviews all its qualifications annually and may make small adjustments to improve the performance of its assessments. We will let you know of any substantive changes.

This is in many ways a good, clear response to the question of Ophelia's mental state and its appeal to the audience, and the candidate has remained aware of the audience throughout. Ophelia's submissiveness is well-exemplified with details from the play, including appropriate terminology, and a feminist critical position on this is acknowledged, although not in the sophisticated way required for Level 6. Analysis is developed in many places, such as the gravediggers' use of 'gentlewoman', and context such as attitudes to suicide, is included, but this section is only loosely related to the question. AO5 is well-addressed within the candidate's own arguments, but generalisations about critical theory (such as feminism) and class discussions could be enhanced with some evidence of detailed wider reading. AO2 is developed in places and less developed in others, for example the statement in some parts of the play we see Ophelia stand up for herself' is offered without detail. Enough of a good, clear argument is evident to merit a low Level 5 mark.

2_	P	Ophelia is a character in Hamlet who has been even though she doserves to hurt and be self-pitying, again highlighting her subservient nature Arguably, the interest in Ophelia's character is stemmed from her madness. In the Elizabethan Era, men's madras was seen as intelligence (represented by Hamlots ante disposition" when Polanius says Though this be madness unnatural and often caused by unrequited bre when Gertrude tells Ophelia, "I do hope Hambets wildness."

The candidate responds competently to Ophelia here, although not immediately to her sanity and madness. The essay begins by discussing Ophelia's relationships with Laertes and Polonius, and whether she is likeable or not, but this is nevertheless competently exemplified and the points made are valid. Quotations such as 'my heart is locked and you are the only one that holds the key' are from a modern English version of the play; candidates must study and quote from the original text. Ophelia's relationship with Hamlet is then explored, and the notion of her being 'interesting' or otherwise to the audience is still the focus, although madness and sanity are not. Some alternative views are offered, and a stage production shows straightforward understanding of an alternative portrayal of Ophelia. The final paragraph is far more focused on the question, with straightforward but definite links to AO5, AO3 (Elizabethan views of men's versus women's madness), and AO2 ('fragmented rhymes'), and it is this which justifies a high mark in Level 4.

This response makes an attempt to discuss Hamlet, Claudius and Fortinbras as effective kings, and some reasonable points are made about Hamlet's brave decision to avenge his father, and Claudius' ability to manipulate people. Points are offered with little quotation and analysis, although some single-word illustrative quotations appear later on. Historical context is alluded to with the idea that Hamlet's vengeance is 'typical of the time' but this is very generalised. The candidate makes an attempt to incorporate critical views with the assertion from Parkes (not a particularly well-known 'Hamlet' critic) that Hamlet is a 'coward', Bentley's (possibly G.E. Bentley) view that the play is really about 'revenge', and the idea that the audience may differ in their views. The 2017 question on revenge seems to have inspired the candidate, who may want to reproduce a previous successful essay here. It is tempting for candidates to take a theme question and argue that the play is not 'about' the theme at all, in order to write more about a favourite theme or idea, but it is crucial to answer the set question directly. Overall, however, enough understanding of the theme within the play is shown to merit a Level 3 mark.

This is an excellent response throughout, showing a particularly detailed understanding of the play and of Angelo. Linguistic analysis is evident from the beginning with the candidate's discussion of 'rein' and its connotations. The argument is fluent, looking first at Angelo's hypocritical acts and then at the effect of them on the audience's perception of morality. Language and structure are again skilfully analysed here, and the evaluation of Angelo's use of 'metal' is skilfully interwoven with a critical view. Alternative readings and a considered argument drive this response, and the candidate selects carefully from wide contextual and critical reading in order to enhance the points they make. Coupled with fluent academic expression and a sharp focus on the question, this makes the response worthy of full marks.

This candidate begins competently with a straightforward account of how Angelo is presented to the audience, first appearing as an effective ruler and then having his unpleasant nature unmasked. A generally-developed argument follows, citing the abuse of Isabella as the most unpleasant thing Angelo does, and the candidate's knowledge of the 1996 production is useful here. The response then wanders from the question, still tackling the 'Angelo's hypocrisy is the most unpleasant...' part of the task, but ignoring the second part of the question which requires the whole response to focus on the candidate's reading of Angelo. AO2 in this essay takes the form of some integrated quotations and inference from them, but terminology is less apparent. AO3 is competent where it appears; although the word 'Protestant' has been used in place of 'Puritan', the candidate has grasped the relevant concept.

This response is good, clear and developed throughout, with a secure understanding of the theme of family loyalty in several parts of the play. The response begins with Richard's betrayal of Clarence, and includes secure references to a critic and a film production. The paragraph then demonstrates analytical skill in the section on Lady Anne, in which well-chosen, integrated quotations and appropriate terminology are used to develop the point. The candidate's knowledge of Elizabethan beliefs about dreams, and a glancing reference to the Wars of the Roses, address AO3, but the rich contextual background of 'Richard III' is not explored as thoroughly as it might be in a Level 6 response. Critical views are well-integrated, but not always skilfully addressed; Cunningham's description of 'England's most controversial monarch' is the view of a historian rather than a critique of the play. Ultimately, however, the detailed linguistic analysis and considered argument in this answer justify the top of Level 5.

Level 4, 20 marks

Ча	In Shahes peare's 'Richard III', he explores the idea of family and the importance and lack of importance of it throughout the play. Shahuspeare namely uses the character of Richard III to show the lack of importance of family latures other characters such as the Dichess and Clarence to show the layalty that the other characters have and also to show their realisation that Richard III doesn't care about family thes. Shahaspeare does this to emphasise the idea of hichard III being a villar, as that fix with the Todor view of the Plantagenet dynasty at the time. So, to an extent the view that family fres cant for northing en that suppersent the He world of hichard III can be supported who looking at the Character of hichard. Family hes also become less important who for other characters who they are dealing with Richard.
	Shakespeare uses the character of Richard III to show show that family thes cant for nothing. This can be seen as Richard is determined to prove a villoun "The use of the adjection "cletormined" shows can be used to show that Richard doesn't care about family thes as it strongly suggests that Richard is willing to do be wants and what he wonts is to prove that he can be a "villain". The use of the non "villain"!  comptes being evil and against formt eters a everyone, the antagonist is life. So, for Richard to Indy become this character he must go against everyone and everything including his family. Behedict cumberbatch accurately possess this villainess side to Richard and his determination to do what it takes.  He does this chrough the chess some of his interpetation of Richard III and this encarages the view of Richard as master manipulator who does what It takes for him to get what he wants. Furthermore, in this interpretation & is clear that Richard has no layalty to his family especially in the scenes with the young Princes as Richard plas their downfall after pretending to be triendly with them. This shonaly supports the view that family thes can't for nothing in Richard III as even the most innocent undeserving of family members are plotted against and used as pawns in hichards game. Shathespeare does this as to counted to highlight the idea that kithad an evil hing so that he can paint a negotive prest victire and support the already biased view in history While is that the Ylantagonet dynasty is one of earl and one that shouldn't have ben trusted. So, Shakespeare to show family thes as unimportant it emphasises his aim of withing the play as a flere of Tudor propagonda. Similarly, Shahispeac also presons famely thes as woman Tosing their importance through the character of the the Duchess on the play. It first , Shales peace presents the Ducheso to be a slightly Emportal character, but with Richards lack of care of family thes increasing Shaluspeare present the Dichess as harring growing more and more impatient with Richard III. This can be seen after the death of the Princes and the Daches exclaiming at Richard that he "Compose on earth" to make the earth her "hell?". The use of this exclamative show the Dooch Duchess' lack of care for Richard as Ex suggests that she no longer has any one for him this is strong especially considering that she is his mother Furthermore, the ise of Migian larguage of "hell" Strongly suggest that Richard III has caused more harm his mother than good. Shalospeae uses this to present family thes as being unimportant as Pt. Shows that the bond between a mother and son has been Wethering away of since birth and that man at that point in the play the damage is inevertile.

	Shakepeare markly uses the women in the plan to sond a message about family and morality as it is mainly the women that are seen given and morning over larged ones. Such as Lady Anne maning the loss of her known hisband and fasher-in-law, as well as Elizabeth and the Duchess marning the loss of the Princes. However, the character that links all of these deaths are Richard so Shahespear makes.

A fully competent response, with a focus throughout on family ties and a range of ideas from across the play. Relevant references are made to the context of the Tudor bias against the Plantaganet dynasty, and the candidate competently addresses Benedict Cumberbatch's portrayal of a 'manipulative' Richard, although this evaluation is not developed. Female characters are an area of interest, and the candidate shows competent understanding of how ties are formed and broken across the play. The analysis of the Duchess' speech, using integrated quotations, and the specific understanding of Laurence Olivier's production, show generally developed engagement, justifying a mark at the top of Level 4. There are some opportunities for further development, which may have pushed the answer into the next level.

	The roles and narrative surrounding Caliban, rulnerable Caliban; however, next to his use of violent imagery distrupts that sense pity the auchience may feel towards Prospero.

F
	In the Sam Mendes' RSC production Caliban enters from a cell and Prospero Forces him back into it at the end. This arguably, connotes that Caliban is at the mercy of Prospero's punitive control. Shakespeare, could, arguably, be exploring the effects of wourpation 'and.
	'political legitamacy' (as one critic argued) as a way to justify caliban's violent actions.
	Therefore, Shakespeare presents caliban as rident:
	Furthermore, Shakospeane presents the characters as a pack of 'selfish drunks' As Stephano begins to manipulate Caliban he demands he 'swear by the bottle' to prome his loyalty.
	The laxical choice 'swear' connotes something a sense of legitamacy and true intentions however Stephano just wants to 'tame nin'.
	This presents them as solfish as they are exploiting Caliban for their own benefit - perhaps in order to gain status or money. This links contextually to the poor treatment of Native people by colonises - they rewed them as savages and animals and used to alchohol to manipulate them. By reflecting this in The Tempest, Shakospeane can be seen as critisizing the selfish behaviour towards Native people. Moreover, their selfishness is further expressed when they become distracted by clother: 'O turing V 0

Stephano... 100k what a wardrobe here is for thee' By become fixated by the clothes, Stephano and Trinculo are presented as being

	The state of the s materialistic rather than staying true to their word and hetping Caliban. Also, the idea of Thing Stephano' seems tidiculous and contemporary audiences would have been shocked at the inversion of the Creat Chain of Being. This ,	Stated that God has appointed a specific king and to go against them would be to go against God. Theregore, Shatospeare could , ,	be mokking the notion of social mobility as Stephano has gone from a butter to a king. This also presents him as selfish for a better position in society.
	Finally, calibal could be triented as intellectual rather than a 'violent and selfish' drunk.
	Caliban wants to show stephano and Trinculo 'all the qualities of the isle'. The plural qualities' expresses his appreciation for rature and beaty of this island. Furthermore, he expresses rain as 'tuches' which connotes a sonse ay contentment and gratefulness for the simple things in juxtaposition to the greedy and materialistic Europeans. One critic argued that Caliban has 'the simplicity ag a child' This exposes a more raise side town ay Caliban who is pos not selfish or violent but not yet knowing the true realities of The world. Thus is embodied in Stephano and Trinculo. Furthermore, caliban shows his Appenhance by his desire to 'seek for grace'- connoting his changed behaviour and resormed character. The noun grace suggests his actinowlegement of the Creat Chain of Being and his new-found understanding that he is belows Prospero. This pro arguably presents him as not being violent and selfish

 Overall, Shakespeane expresses stephano and Trinculo as 'selfish dranks' who seem fixated on material things and gaining status.
	Furthermore Caliban's transformation from violent savage to noble savage supports the fact that the Trampest is arguably 'an aborted revenoe tragedy

This response addresses all aspects of the question in a secure, clear manner and includes some analysis of detail which is skilful enough to push Level 6. Caliban's speech and imagery is linked very well to contemporary ideas (Bacon's 'Of Revenge'), and the RSC production is used to develop the point further. The candidate's own alternative readings are evident in phrases such as 'a more vulnerable Caliban'. AO3 and AO5 are interwoven holistically, for example 'Shakespeare could be mocking the notion of social mobility', although use of critics is a little general for a secure Level 6 mark, and the critical quotation 'the simplicity of a child' misquotes Coleridge's description of Ariel. Secure references to the Great Chain of Being and European colonialism are evident. The analysis of lexical choices such as 'swear' and 'riches' shows enough detailed understanding of the writer's craft to place the answer on the Level 5/6 borderline.

Examiner commentary

This response begins competently, discussing Prospero's highly-valued magical powers, and the education he has provided for himself, but also features a number of points which are more characteristic of an 'attempt' at the question, such as the unconvincing analysis of the word 'art', and the assumption that Miranda literally believes there is a cure for deafness. As an argument, the essay makes some relevant points, for example that Miranda's lack of education does, perhaps, celebrate its power and value because 'it shows how a lack of education can lead to dependence'. If exemplified more thoroughly, these points could have formed a secure Level 4 response or even better. Awareness of context is shown in terms of the patriarchal views of society, and there is a reference to Coleridge's view of Ariel as having 'childlike simplicity', although Coleridge himself is not named. This point would be well worth exploring, but the candidate seems to know the opening scene better than the others, and so reference to the text diminishes as the answer goes on. There is enough competence displayed for a borderline Level 3/4 mark, but no more.

This candidate responds to the question in a straightforward way by broadly agreeing that Sir Toby does care more for pleasure than for people, but occasionally they seem more keen to answer a different question. The essay opens with a competent point about Sir Toby's first appearance on stage, supported with quotations and a critical view. However, the reference to Orsino provides more analysis of his character than it does of Sir Toby's. The candidate displays a range of linguistic terminology ('exclamatory phrase'; 'malapropism') and shows generally-developed understanding of several aspects of Sir Toby's character, such as his relationships with Sir Andrew and Maria. These paragraphs are driven by narrative and inference, but the integrated quotations do address AO2 consistently. Although the response is strong enough to reach the higher end of Level 4, alternative critical readings and contextual links are only generally addressed, and if developed might have pushed the response into Level 5, especially if combined with better focus on the question at the beginning.

Section 2 – Poetry pre-1900 The Merchant's Prologue and Tale Question 7

7 Geoffrey Chaucer: The Merchant's Prologue and Tale

Discuss Chaucer's portrayal of the Merchant's view of marriage in the following extract from The Merchant's Tale.

In your answer explore the author's use of language, imagery and verse form and consider ways in which you find this extract characteristic of The Merchant's Prologue and Tale. [30]

Exemplar 1

Level 5, 25 marks

7		Throughout the Merchant's tale, Chancer porrays the Merchant's view on marriage as extremely · · · · · ·	amonguous as the conflict between the narriage 1	and not the marrying is one of the contral themes or the tale.
	-	In this extract, Chancer presents the merchant as having a positive view on marriage, however there are undertones of sureasm and wony in the extract. ļ,	When the merchant describes marriage as 'his paradis'
	-	this evokes doubt and question in the audience as, at the time heaven was considered as paralise and it was considered blashphamous to never to anything. else as 'paradis'. consequently, chances could *	be being wonic in his description or marriage in this extract is he is booking to undermone this genre or high romance created and subtry mock the Merchant's words on marriage. Additionally, the religious reserence of Adam and Eve further connoves a skewed interpretation on the "greet sacrement" or marriage. The Merchant resers to God sending helpe unto Adam by sending Eve, however this could refer to temptation and relate to the forbidden Arist in the garden or Eden. This would compare marriage with temptation and evil, which is clear in Januarie's case as he is tempted by the beauty and physical attraction or young women.

Additionally, this extract is undermined by chancer throughout the rest or the Merchant's tale as he. undermines marriage and presents women as desert bound to cheat on or make life for their his band imbearable. Indeed, is in the 14th Century, there were punishments for women who spoke too much and they had to wear a much over their nouth in public. In the prologue the Merchant claims that he doesn't want to tell about his own marriage as it brings win too much pain to theme about it, undermining What he later says in this extract about the 'bliese' of married like. Moreover, throughout the tale, he presents yentil May as a symbol for all wives and shows them to be unraithful us May hastely took the note off Damyen and 'twisteth' his hand. 'hastily' as sexual connotations and presents May as a bustown, sex-driven woman, which was common for 14th Century believe that women were very dependant and histand for sex all the time. This stereotype is highlighted in the wife or Bath's tale, as the wife or Bath is booking for he sixth hisband as all the previous five had been sexually overworked. This once More suggests that Chancer is troic in his positive description of marriage in this extract as in reality women are unfaithful the to a large sexual appelite. On the other hand, this extract does table about the true positives or marriage. It The Merchant orters to marriage as a ful greet sacrament's which it was. Marriage resembled the unity

•	of a man and a woman in love and matrimony, Indeed, there were examples of marriage being 1	a thing of 'goodnesse' and women truly being resmons. In the Franklin's tale, Durigen is presented as an idealistic wire who obeys her husband and stays true to her promise, even it means giving her love to unother man. This idea of a good, virtuous wire is also highlighted in the
	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
	Merchant's tale at times as May is described as ,	Fresshe May conniting beauty and innovence, with language or high romance and idealistic imagery created. However, this idea is undermined as May proves her description or 'gentil' is wonic and is has a double meaning as she is overly 'genty' with more men than Januarie. This is highlighted as May puts the note that Damijes gives her in her bosom, completely undermining the elegance of high romance.
, , ,	chancer knother emphasises the marriage as and comic as he switches genre into a rabbiner as May reads the note on the privry!
	Overall, chancer presents the Merchant's view as stightly ambiguous as despite; talking about it. positively in this extract, there is an embertone or mothery in Marriage as pormyed throughout the novel of the beautiful, young May cannot be satisfied by her senex Amuns hisbund Junvarie who isn't worth a beno so must fulfil her sexual desires elecution  	and so porrays marriage us something to avoid

A fully secure response to the poem, which develops points throughout in order to show a clear understanding of the Merchant's view of marriage. The response covers the layers of meaning in the tone of the extract, which are well-exemplified and linked closely with Januarie's experiences later in the tale. Understanding of the presentation of women across the tale, and even in 'The Wife of Bath's Tale' and 'The Franklin's Tale', is consistent and clear, and contributes well to the argument. The candidate links context to the argument in the form of 14th-century views of women, and the high romance and fabliau genres, and always makes connections securely and clearly. The integration of quotations adds to the fluency of the response, although meaning tends to be inferred from quotations more often than from analysis of language and structure itself. This might have helped the candidate to achieve Level 6, especially if the analysis had focused more consistently on the main passage.

	Prior to the extract the Merchants prologue informs us of his initial 1-	Masoganistic views that he has formed from having a wife, whom he believes is 'the worst that may be'. Therefore, •	we know that the extract is a Sarcastic view that many un-married men, such as January when thinking of gettind married 'day to day', would have.
	The extract begins with the Merchant describing Marriage as a ful greet sacrement; this contextually was correct as in the eyes of the Merchant's audience, the pilgrims, many of them would know than Marriage was one of the sacraments of the Owrch; so he uses this to engage his audience.
	The Merchant then continues by talking about how for Adam & God made him Eve' This once again involves the Merchants andience as they would Eve, so it allows them to engage
	more with the Merchans tale, which is what he would have wanted as he is trying to win the tale competition against the other pilgrims. He describes having a wife to be paradis' and this is reflected by January in the poem who initially is worried that he he means that he cannot have a
	he means that he cannot have a wife and still go to heaven The Merchant further corroborates this idea as he describes wife wives to be buscom and so vertuous', however we know that he to doesn't actually believe this because in his prologue he describes his wife's 'cursednesse'. The idea of a virtuous and obediant wife could represent Griselda who is from the previous pilgrims tale who follows all orders from her husband and makes great sacrafices for him. Similarly we initially we see the same characteristics

This is a fully competent response with some elements of good secure analysis. The candidate begins by showing understanding of the layers of meaning presented before and within the extract, and this section shows understanding of context in terms of ideas from the Bible and the Church which were familiar to Chaucer's audience. The candidate integrates quotations well into the following argument, although they somewhat overlook the opportunity to analyse language with terminology. The middle section of the response is more narrative, albeit with competent quotation and inference related to the question, and then some better language analysis appears ('undermined by the casual cadence of the iambic pentameter'). Overall the understanding shown is just beyond competent, and there is evidence of good secure analytical skill. If demonstrated more thoroughly, this may have lifted the response higher in Level 5.

Examiner commentary

This response begins by acknowledging the difference between Chaucer's view of marriage and the Merchant's, and continues with a competent, generally-developed point about the inherent sexism in the telling of the story of Adam and Eve. However, this is just one example of links to other parts of the poem which are better-developed and analysed than the main passage. This candidate seems to have competent, or even better, understanding of Chaucer's concerns and of the presentation of marriage in the tale as a whole, and they competently link context to the parts of the tale they deal with, but a lack of developed engagement with the passage means that this response fits the criteria for low Level 4.

This is an excellent response which begins with detailed focus on language, and skilfully interweaves references to Milton's religious beliefs and his intended audience, while also examining the layers of his presentation of Death. The candidate provides complex views of Death, for example that he is 'only riled and anticipatory with regards to hell and the punishment of others'. A detailed analysis of Milton's personification, sibilance and enjambment follows, demonstrating an excellent grasp of the linguistic effects of the poetry. Phrases such as 'moreover' and 'while also' help the candidate to keep up a developed analysis of the passage, adding several layers to every point. The response integrates detailed examples and links to the Bible in impressive detail, always keeping up a fluent argument and focus on the task. The link to the beginning of Book 9 is similarly detailed, using terminology accurately and frequently. Overall, this is a consistently detailed and developed response to the passage within the whole poem, addressing all the AOs very well.

This is a good, secure response to the passage and other linked sections of the poem. The answer begins with a clear and developed focus on language, such as contrasting lexical sets and the sibilance of 'snuffed the smell'. References to other parts of the poem are fairly brief ('and also relates to Adam's questioning at the end of Book 10') and not always related to Death's presentation, but they are clear and integrated well into the overall argument. The answer is also fairly light on contextual links, although the candidate's understanding of biblical and Miltonian ideas is implicit throughout the response. The depth of analytical detail, and the well-expressed understanding ('they are like hunting animals who have immaculate skill and are almost unstoppable') elevates this response to the higher end of Level 5.

This is a competent response to Milton's presentation of Death in the passage. It begins with a straightforward reading of the passage and its placement in the story of 'Paradise Lost' as a whole, supported by quotations, and the candidate analyses language competently ('the word "savour" suggests that they were meant to suffer from the punishment'). Expression is not always as clear as it might be, and this can prevent meaning from coming across securely ('This portrays death as being fun for God to use'), but general understanding is still evident. The candidate has grasped the effects of language and structure, but does not always explain them specifically, or using terminology. For example, they refer to 'the repeated D sound' rather than alliteration, and state that 'Milton ignored the somewhat rules of poetry' without specifying how. Contextual links are present, but rather brief and general, so a mark at the top of the level is not appropriate, but there is enough competent analysis for the middle of Level 4.

This response demonstrates an excellent and detailed contextual understanding of Rossetti's poetry. For example, the candidate recognises how 'Winter, My Secret' challenges the master narrative, and relates this skilfully to 'Maude Clare'. There is detailed linguistic and structural analysis related to the concept of a playful speaking voice, for example the use of caesura to encourage an emotional connection to the poem in 'Winter...' and also 'No Thank You, John'. The link between the named poem and 'A Birthday' in terms of the rainbow image is perceptive, and further widens the range of features compared and contrasted. Contextual links are highly appropriate and informed, hinting at a knowledge of Rossetti's work which is wider still. The main strength of the response, however, is its consistently detailed analysis of the voice in 'Winter, My Secret'. Developed AO2 and AO4 are a strength, and AO3 links are highly appropriate and informed, hinting at an even wider appreciation of Rossetti's poetry.

This response demonstrates secure linguistic analysis from the beginning, with developed ideas about the line 'Today's a nipping, biting day...'. The candidate analyses several details well, using terminology appropriately. There is a clear focus on the playfulness of the speaking voice, and the candidate makes a secure connection to 'Soeur Louise de la Misericorde', again offering a developed exploration. Some ideas are less well-expressed, such as the assertion 'she hates spring so it's controversial and shocks the readers', but this is the exception rather than the rule. The response makes use of a variety of links, some of them thematic or ideas-based, such as the connection to 'Twice', and some of them directly about voices in the poems. Contextual knowledge is good overall, although the link between 'you're too curious' and Rossetti's lack of support for women's suffrage is less convincing. Overall, the response is good and clear, and merits a mark high in Level 5.

This response opens with competent linguistic analysis of 'Winter, My Secret', with a generally developed discussion of details in the poem, and how they relate to a playful speaking voice. The paragraph on Dante Gabriel Rossetti and the characteristics of Christina Rossetti herself relates loosely to the theme in the sense that it is about secrecy, but the candidate has listed a lot of historical knowledge here without relating it explicitly to the poem and question. Marks are gained for the quality of contextual links to the text, not pure knowledge. The focus shifts back to the poem's playful voice and makes a competent point about the reader's frustration, although the link to 'No Thank You, John' is very general. The short integrated quotations from the main poem and 'A Birthday' are more characteristic, stylistically, of a Level 5 response, but the development ('We are able to feel the emotion and meaning behind each stanza through her expressive natural imagery') is far more general. The quality of the response is mixed, but a mid-level 4 mark represents the best fit.

This response attempts to engage with the question at the beginning, but most comments and links are not question-focused. The candidate starts by referring to voice ('a sense of being patronising'), then deals with the theme of secrecy and concealment, which is loosely but not explicitly related to a playful speaking voice. Nevertheless, the candidate does recognise and explain linguistic features of the poem, such as the repetition of 'my' and 'mine' conveying concern on the part of the speaker. The response shows understanding of context, but does not relate it particularly to the task. There is a closer reference to playfulness when the candidate suggests that the voice is 'perhaps a little bit smug', and this lifts the answer above the middle of Level 3. The link to 'No Thank You, John' is brief but also related to the idea of voice. Had the candidate focused on the speaking voice sooner in the response, this answer might have made its way into Level 4.
