Introduction

Our examiners' reports are produced to offer constructive feedback on candidates' performance in the examinations. They provide useful guidance for future candidates. The reports will include a general commentary on candidates' performance, identify technical aspects examined in the questions and highlight good performance and where performance could be improved. The reports will also explain aspects which caused difficulty and why the difficulties arose, whether through a lack of knowledge, poor examination technique, or any other identifiable and explainable reason.

Where overall performance on a question/question part was considered good, with no particular areas to highlight, these questions have not been included in the report. A full copy of the exam paper can be downloaded from OCR.

Paper Unit 6 series overview

The examination paper assessed candidates' knowledge and understanding of personalisation and a person-centred approach to care. To do well on the paper candidates needed to know the key features of personalisation and to understand how these are applied in practice.

Most candidates attempted all questions and appeared to have sufficient time to complete the paper. Those that did well demonstrated an in-depth understanding of the principles and practices of personalisation. Short responses were succinct and clearly stated. Longer responses were well-structured and clearly focused on the question being asked. Candidates who did less well on the paper knew key terms but did not demonstrate an in-depth understanding of person-centred practice. Responses were not always relevant to the questions and sometimes demonstrated gaps in understanding. Extended responses were muddled and repetitious.

Highly able candidates demonstrated a sound understanding of key principles of personalisation such as 'independence and rights', 'voice, choice and control', 'co-production' and 'inclusive communities' and the legislation which underpins them. They were able to describe key principles and demonstrated an understanding of how they influence practice in relation to different scenarios. Candidates could describe barriers to a person-centred approach and identify ways these could be overcome. Less able candidates demonstrated their knowledge of key terms but did not appear to have a clear understanding of their meaning. They were not able to clearly articulate how a person-centred approach might be used in relation to different scenarios. Candidates also had a limited knowledge about relevant legislation and were unable to identify key features of The Care Act 2014 and The Health and Social Care Act 2012.

Higher achieving candidates:	Lower achieving candidates:
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • provided detailed and well-structured answers to extended response questions • ensured their responses directly addressed the questions asked • demonstrated a depth of knowledge and understanding of personalisation • understood the principles and practices of a person-centred approach. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • demonstrated a limited ability to develop a well-structured extended response • did not always address the question being asked • demonstrated a basic knowledge and understanding of key terms of personalisation • lacked an in-depth understanding of personalisation and a person-centred approach.

Question 1 (a)

1 (a) Describe three ways in which the Care Act 2014 promotes a person-centred approach.

3.....

[6]

Candidates were required to demonstrate knowledge of the Care Act 2014 by describing three features which promote a person-centred approach. A significant number of candidates were not able to clearly identify three features of the Act. However, many scored some marks for describing an aspect of a person-centred approach which was aligned with the principles of the legislation. Most frequently cited features of the Act were ‘no decision about me without me’; voice, choice and control; personal budgets; and services being centred around the needs of individuals.

	AfL	The key features of legislation which relate to personalisation should be taught to candidates to make sure they have sufficient knowledge to achieve well.

Question 1 (b)

(b) Give one example for each of the following challenges to a person-centred approach.

Resistance to change

.....

.....

Lack of training

.....

.....

Institutional history

.....

.....

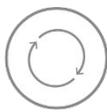

Communication barriers

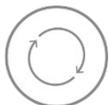

.....

[4]

Candidates did not generally score well on this question. A significant number described the challenge rather than providing an example. For instance, 'not being able to communicate' (communication barrier); and 'staff not being trained' (lack of training). Frequent credited responses were: 'a care worker thinking they know best' (resistance to change); 'staff not being trained in person-centred approaches' (lack of training); 'doing things the way they have been done in the past' (institutional history); and 'staff not understanding the needs of a non-verbal individual' (communication barriers).

	AfL	Candidates should be made aware that when asked to give an example this must be specific and related to practice. They should be provided with opportunities to practice giving examples of features of person-centred care.

Question 3 (a) (i)

3 (a) (i) Identify three features of a person-centred approach to individual care planning.

- 1.....
.....
- 2.....
.....
- 3.....
.....

[3]

Candidates scored well on this question with a wide variety of correct responses. Candidates most frequently lost marks for giving vague responses such as 'valuing individuals'.

Question 3 (a) (ii)

(ii) Identify two methods for overcoming the challenges to a person-centred approach to individual care planning.

- 1.....
.....
- 2.....
.....

[2]

Most candidates were able to identify at least one method. The most frequent correct responses were staff training, modelling behaviour and values-based recruitment.

Question 4 (b)

(b) Identify how the following person-centred tools might be used to support Emily:

Routines

.....
.....

Top tips

.....
.....

Relationship circle

.....
.....

One-page profile

.....
.....

[4]

Most candidates were able to identify how the person-centred tools could be used to support Emily. Those who lost marks did so most frequently for not having a clear understanding of how 'routines' and 'top tips' might be used to improve care. There was a wider understanding of 'relationship circles' and 'one-page profiles'.

Question 4 (c)

(c) List three reasons why a GP should build effective relationships with their patients.

1.....
.....
2.....
.....
3.....
.....

[3]

Candidates scored well on this question with most able to identify at least one or two correct reasons. Frequently credited responses were to make sure patients are comfortable, to build trust and to encourage patients to discuss their needs.

Question 4 (d)

(d) State two questions which Emily might be asked at a person-centred review meeting.

1.....
.....
2.....
.....

[2]

Most candidates were able to state two plausible questions. Frequently credited responses were, 'what is working for you?' and 'what is not working for you?' Candidates lost marks for writing a question which was not directed towards Emily. For instance, 'what care would she like?'
