Introduction

We've updated our Sociology A Level for first teaching in September 2027, with first assessment in Summer 2029.

We've worked in close partnership with a wide range of stakeholders at each stage of the development, including The British Sociological Association and The Sociological Review Foundation, to ensure the specification is, and remains, up to date and relevant.

We also carried out an ethnicity, diversity, inclusion and belonging (EDIB) review to ensure the qualification supports our wider commitment to EDIB. The new specification modernises the course content and begins to check and remove assumptions about the world, to ensure the course is inclusive to everyone.

Our Sociology qualification has been designed for teachers and students looking for an engaging, modern and highly relevant Sociology curriculum. It is accessible to a range of students who will have the chance to learn and develop key sociological skills and ways of thinking.

This mapping guide highlights the content that remains the same as before and where topics have been added or removed.

This mapping guide

In the tables that follow, you can see:

- refreshed component details including key questions and the content they link to
- how the refreshed components map to the current specification components that you may already know, at learning outcome level
- brief comments about the changes we've made
- new content introduced to the specification
- old content that has been removed.

Mapping the new specification against the current specification

Please note: For the new H583 specification, we have removed the 'Learners should' column that appears in the H580 specification and added any content there into the new 'Points to include (Breadth)' column. In this column we have also added some key concepts that must be delivered to students as they could appear in future exam questions, e.g. 'global culture (including reverse colonialism, global village)'.

In the 'Comments' column, where it says 'No content changes', the content remains the same, although some wording may have changed.
